

Phage therapy in Apiculture - prospects

American Foulbrood (AFB) is a bacterial disease affecting honeybees, with no currently available treatment. The infectious process begins when adult bees provide spore-contaminated food to their larvae. We investigated the possibility of using phages to control AFB, orally administered to adult bees, by characterizing phage safety, biodistribution and activity in hive conditions.

Ana Oliveira

Centre of Biological Engineering, University of Minho, Braga, Portugal